

I enjoy being out on those bright spring days when yellowhammers can be seen coursing low over the fields; males in their bright yellow headgear pursuing the females. Whenever I paint one I think I have overdone the colour until I see one singing in the hedge in direct sunlight and I realise, if anything, it's the opposite

